

Faculty position with a mission of Academic Director of a graduate program in Entrepreneurship
Le Havre Campus

The position and its requirements

As tenured professor, you will have to manage a Graduate program in Entrepreneurship in Le Havre. You will have a teaching load of 120 hours per year, in order to enable you to focus on research academic activities under an agreed three year production schedule. A competitive salary is offered with additional research performance-based bonuses.

The position requires a doctorate or a PhD in Management, with a orientation in strategy and entrepreneurship. Candidates with a proven track record in teaching will have to provide evidence of recent and expected publications in peer-reviewed journals. Fluency in English is required and French would also be an asset, although additional training can be provided. Priority will be given to candidates with international experience.

The School and its research and teaching environment

EM Normandie was established in 1871 as one of the first Grandes Ecoles, and has since been considered as a reference among French business schools. EM Normandie is an EQUIS and AACSB-accredited institution. EM Normandie has been ranked 67th place with its “Grande Ecole” programme in the Financial Times. Over 3,500 students and trainees attend its programs on its five campuses in Le Havre, Caen, Paris, Dublin and Oxford.

The EM Normandie mission has been defined to educate the managers of tomorrow, as responsible executives prepared to lead change in a cross-cultural environment. EM Normandie promotes the intellectual contributions of its faculty (72 core faculty members in January 2018), whether academic or applied, to guaranty high added value in the educational process of all its students. The School offers around twenty training pre-experience and continuous education programs, both in French and in English.

If you want to develop your research projects among our dynamic faculty and its network, if you share our passion for teaching and aspire to expand your teaching skills, if you are able to demonstrate that you are strong team players and self-motivated individuals, this position is for you.
